

Lois Adams-Rodgers serves as deputy commissioner of the Bureau of Learning and Results Services for the Kentucky Department of Education. Her duties at the department include overseeing the offices that provide policy and administrative direction for school finance, transportation, facilities, technology, professional development, curriculum, assessment and accountability, special education and other Federal programs, Regional Service Centers, career and technical education, preschool, literacy, extended school services, student and family support, data management and Kentucky Virtual High School.

Adams-Rodgers, a Kentucky educator with nearly 30 years of experience, previously was director of the Center for School Safety at Eastern Kentucky University. Her earlier experiences include her serving as an associate professor at the University of Kentucky, director of the Kentucky Institute on Education Reform, an administrator in Jessamine and Henry Counties and a teacher in Jefferson County. She also served as chief of staff, deputy commissioner and program consultant during two earlier stints with the department.

Adams-Rodgers earned a bachelor's degree, master's degree and doctorate from the University of Louisville.